BUNAWAY TRAIN SMASHES ITSELF INTO BIG DEPOT

Dashes at Full Speed Through Long Island City Yards.

full speed it rushed down the track to the depot jar.med through the buffer; ploughed through fifty feet of the rock and cement pavement and brought up with a crash against the massive side

The train was made up of three coaches and a combination baggage car. The coaches were crowded with persons from the North Shore. The train was from the North Shore. The train was in charge of Conductor Conway, with Engineer Commonal at the throttle. As the train pulled into the upper end of the yard the engineer threw over the air throttle. The train was running at full speed, but to his horror the brakes refused to work. Again and again he jerked the lever and all the time the rolling catapult was approaching the terminus.

disorders.

Crashed Through Buffer.

At the end of the track was a huge buffer of oak beams, reinforced with steel rails bent around and planted in a stone foundation. The engineer reversed his engine when he found the air could not be made to work, but it was too late to stop the ponderous weight. The engine hit the buffer and went through it like cheese.

Between the buffer and the station depot is a broad coment walk, three feet above the level of the tracks. Big steel beams support the roof that covers the platform. A massive iron fence crosses the platform in front of the tracks to keep waiting passengers back until trains are ready.

Hundreds were waiting in the following train. When they saw it was a runaway they fied, shouting and a runaway they fied a r
